

TAK

Time is taken for so much of infinite duration, as is measured out by the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

They who would advance in knowledge, should lay down this as a fundamental rule, not to take words for things. Locke.
Few will take a proposition which amounts to no more than this, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands for an innate moral principle, since it teaches so little. Locke.

Some Tories will take you for a Whig, some Whigs will take you for a Tory. Pope.

As I take it, the two principal branches of preaching are, to tell the people what is their duty, and then to convince them that it is so. Swift.

49. To direct.
Where injur'd Nisus takes his airy course,
Hence trembling Scylla flies and shuns his foe. Dryden.

50. To separate for one's self from any quantity; to remove for one's self from any place.
I will take of them for priests. Isa. lvi. 21.
Hath God allayed to take a nation from the midst of another. Deut. iv. 34.

I might have taken her to me to wife. Gen. xii. 19.
Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him. Gen. v. 24.

The Lord took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders.
Four heifers from his female store he took. Dryden.

51. Not to leave; not to omit.
The discourse here is about ideas, which he says are real things, and we see in God: in taking this along with me, to make it prove any thing to his purpose, the argument must stand thus. Locke.

Young gentlemen ought not only to take along with them a clear idea of the antiquities on medals and figures, but likewise to exercise their arithmetic in reducing the sums of money to those of their own country. Arbutnot on Coins.

52. To receive payments.
Never a wife leads a better life than she does; do what she will, take all, pay all. Shakespeare.

53. To obtain by measurement.
The knight coming to the tailor's to take measure of his gown, perceiveth the like gown cloth lying there. Camden.

With a two foot rule in his hand measuring my walls, he took the dimensions of the room. Swift.

54. To withdraw.
Honeycomb, on the verge of threefold, took me aside, and asked me whether I would advise him to marry? Speklat.

55. To seize with a transitory impulse; to affect so as not to last.
Tiberius, noted for his niggardly temper, only gave his attendants their diet; but once he was taken with a fit of generosity, and divided them into three classes. Arbutnot.

56. To comprise; to comprehend.
We always take the account of a future state into our schemes about the concerns of this world. Atterbury.

Had those who would persuade us that there are innate principles, not taken them together in gross, but considered separately the parts, they would not have been so forward to believe they were true. Locke.

57. To have recourse to.
A sparrow took a bush just as an eagle made a stoop at an hare. L'Estrange.

The cat presently takes a tree, and sees the poor fox torn to pieces. L'Estrange.

58. To produce; or suffer to be produced.
No purposes whatsoever which are meant for the good of that land will prosper, or take good effect. Spenser.

59. To catch in the mind.
These do best who take material hints to be judged by history. Locke.

60. To hire; to rent.
If three ladies, like a luckless play,
Takes the whole house upon the poet's day. Pope.

61. To engage in; to be active in.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now the father, and propose a son;
Behold yourself to be a son disdained;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your power to silence your son. Shak. Henry IV.

62. To suffer; to support.
In streams, my boy, and rivers take thy chance,
There swims, said he, thy whole inheritance. Addison.

Now take your turn; and, as a brother thou'd,
Attend your brother to the Stygian flood. Dryden's Æn.

63. To admit in copulation.
Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
Producing mules of greater speed and force. Sandys.

64. To catch eagerly.
Drances took the word; who grudg'd, long since,
The rising glories of the Dauidian prince. Dryden.

65. To rule as an oath or expression.
Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord in vain. Exod.

66. To seize as a dislate.

TAK

They that come abroad after these she-were are commonly taken with sickness. Bacon.

I am taken on the sudden with a swimming in my head. Dryden.

67. To take away. To deprive of.
If any take away from the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life. Rev. xx. 19.

The bill for taking away the votes of bishops was called a bill for taking away all temporal jurisdiction. Clorenson.

Many dispersed objects breed confusion, and take away from the picture that grave majesty which gives beauty to the piece. Dryden.

You should be hunted like a beast of prey,
By your own law I take your life away. Dryden.

The funeral pomp which to your kings you pay,
Is all I want, and all you take away. Dryden's Æn.

One who gives another any thing, has not always a right to take it away again. Locke.

68. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Not does nor fortune takes this power away,
And is my Abeldar less kind than they. Pope.

69. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
We take away all consciousness of pleasure and pain, it will be hard to know wherein to place personal identity. Locke.

70. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Doth God take away for oxen? 1 Cor. ix. 9.

71. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
They meant to take away to deal with particulars by reconciliations, and cared not for any head. Bacon.

72. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
The violence of storming is the course which God is forced to take for the destroying, but cannot, without changing the course of nature, for the converting of sinners. Hammond.

73. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Do you think he is now so dangerous an enemy as he is counted, or that it is so hard to take him down as some suppose? Spenser on Ireland.

74. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Lacqueys were never so faucy and pragmatical as now, and he should be glad to see them taken down. Addison.

75. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
We cannot take down the lives of living creatures, which some of the Paracelsians say, if they could be taken down, would make us immortal: the next for subtilty of operation, to take bodies petrified, such as may be easily taken. Bacon.

76. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
It takes not from you, that you were born with principles of generosity; but it adds to you that you have cultivated nature. Dryden.

77. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Conversation will add to their knowledge, but be too apt to take from their virtue. Locke.

78. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Creative gods take my breath from me. Shakespeare.

79. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee. 1 Sam.

80. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Take heed of a mischievous man. Ecclesi. xi. 33.

81. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Take heed lest passion
Sway thy judgment to do ought. Milton.

82. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Children to serve their parents int'rest live,
Take heed what doom against yourself you give. Dryden.

83. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Nothing sweeter than to take heed unto the commandments of the Lord. Ecclesi. xxi. 27.

84. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
These heads are sufficient for the explication of this whole matter; taking in some additional discourses, which make the work more even. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

85. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
This love of our country takes in our families, friends, and acquaintance. Addison.

86. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
The disuse of the tucker has enlarged the neck of a fine woman, that at present it takes in almost half the body. Add.

87. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Of these matters no satisfactory account can be given by any mechanical hypothesis, without taking in the superintendence of the great Creator. Deham's Physics-Theol.

88. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
An opinion brought into his head by course, because he heard himself called a father, rather than any kindness that he found in his own heart, made him take us in. Sidney.

89. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
A great vessel full being drawn into bottles, and then the liquor put again into the vessel, will not fill the vessel again so full as it was, but that it may take in more. Bacon.

90. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Porter was taken in not only as a bed-chamber servant, but as an useful instrument for his skill in the Spanish. Wotton.

91. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all; and verge enough for more. Dryden.

92. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
The light and touch take in from the same object different ideas. Locke.

93. To take away. To set aside; to remove.
There is the same irregularity in my plantations: I take in none that do not naturally rejoice in the soil. Speklat.

TAK

80. To take in. To win.
He sent Afan-aga with the Janizaries, and pieces of great ordnance, to take in the other cities of Tunis. Koolies.

81. To take in. To win.
Should a great beauty resolve to take me in with the artillery of her eyes, it would be as vain as for a thief to set upon a new robbed passenger. Suetting.

82. To take in. To win.
Open places are easily taken in, and towns not strongly fortified make but a weak resistance. Fulton on the Classics.

83. To take in. To win.
We went before, and failed unto Afios, there intending to take in Paul. Acts xx. 13.

84. To take in. To win.
That which men take in by education is next to that which is natural. Tillotson's Sermons.

85. To take in. To win.
As no acid is in an animal body but must be taken in by the mouth, so if it is not subdued it may get into the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

86. To take in. To win.
To receive mentally.
Though a created understanding can never take in the fullness of the divine excellencies, yet so much as it can receive is of greater value than any other object. Hale.

87. To take in. To win.
The idea of extension joins itself so inseparably with all visible qualities, that it suffers to see no one without taking in impressions of extension too. Locke.

88. To take in. To win.
It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding to frame one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways afore-mentioned. Locke.

89. To take in. To win.
A man can never have taken in his full measure of knowledge before he is hurried off the stage. Addison's Spect.

90. To take in. To win.
Let him take in the instructions you give him in a way suited to his natural inclination. Watts.

91. To take in. To win.
Some bright genius can take in a long train of propositions. Watts.

92. To take in. To win.
To swear.
The king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken of the king's seed, and of him taken an oath. Ezek.

93. To take in. To win.
We take all oath of secrecy, for the concealing of those inventions which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

94. To take in. To win.
To invalidate; to destroy; to remove.
You must forsake this room and go with us;
Your power and your command is taken off. Shakespeare's Othello.

95. To take in. To win.
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. Shakespeare's Othello.

96. To take in. To win.
The cruel ministers
Took off her life. Shakespeare.

97. To take in. To win.
If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the mixed multitude return to their obedience, such an extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

98. To take in. To win.
Sena loathes its windiness by decocting; and subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon.

99. To take in. To win.
To stop chins, take off the principal authors by winning and advancing them, rather than engage them by violence. Bacon.

100. To take in. To win.
What take off the objection is, that in judging scandal we are to look to the cause whence it cometh. Bishop Sanderfon.

101. To take in. To win.
The promises, the terrors, or the authority of the commander, must be the topic whence that argument is drawn; and all force of these is taken off by this doctrine. Hammond.

102. To take in. To win.
It will not be unwelcome to these worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning, as being likely to find a clear progression when so many untruths are taken off. Brown.

103. To take in. To win.
This take off the force of our former evidence. Still.

104. To take in. To win.
If the mark, by hindering its exportation, makes it less valuable, the melting pot can easily take it off. Locke.

105. To take in. To win.
A man's understanding failing him, would take off that presumption most men have of themselves. Locke.

106. To take in. To win.
It shows virtue in the fairest light, and takes off from the deformity of vice. Addison.

107. To take in. To win.
When we would take off from the reputation of an action, we ascribe it to vain glory. Addison.

108. To take in. To win.
This take off from the elegance of our tongue, but expels our ideas in the readiest manner. Addison.

109. To take in. To win.
The justices decreed, to take off a halpenny in a quart from the price of ale. Swift's Miscel.

110. To take in. To win.
How many lives have been lost in hot blood, and how many likely to be taken off in cold. Blount to Pope.

111. To take in. To win.
Favourable names are put upon ill ideas, to take off the odium. Watts.

112. To take in. To win.
To withhold; to withdraw.
He perceiving that we were willing to say somewhat, in great courtesy took us off, and condescended to ask us questions. Bacon.

113. To take in. To win.
Your present distemper is not so troublesome, as to take you off from all satisfaction. Wake.

114. To take in. To win.
There is nothing more resty and ungovernable than our thoughts: they will not be directed what objects to pursue, nor be taken off from those they have once fixed on; but run away with a man in pursuit of those ideas they have in view, let him do what he can. Locke.

115. To take in. To win.
Keep foreign ideas from taking off our minds from its present pursuit. Locke.

116. To take in. To win.
To swallow.
Were the pleasure of drinking accompanied, the moment a man takes off his glass, with that sick stomach which, in some men, follows not many hours after, nobody would ever let wine touch his lips. Locke.

TAK

87. To take off. To purchase.
Corn, in plenty, the labourer will have at his own rate, else he'll not take it off the farmer's hands for wages. Locke.

88. To take off. To purchase.
The Spaniards having no commodities that we will take off, above the value of one hundred thousand pounds per annum, cannot pay us. Locke.

89. To take off. To purchase.
There is a project on foot for transporting our best wheat straw to Dunstable, and obliging us to take off yearly for many ton of straw hats. Swift's Miscel.

90. To take off. To purchase.
To copy.
Take off all their models in wood. Addison.

91. To take off. To purchase.
To find place for.
The multiplying of nobility brings a state to necessity; and, in like manner, when more are bred scholars than preceptors can take off. Bacon's Essays.

92. To take off. To purchase.
To remove.
When Moses went in, he took the veil off until he came out. Exod. xxxiv. 34.

93. To take off. To purchase.
If any would reign and take up all the time, let him take them off and bring others on. Bacon.

94. To take off. To purchase.
He has taken you off, by a peculiar instance of his mercy, from the vanities and temptations of the world. Wake.

95. To take off. To purchase.
To check; to take course with.
Though he would have turned his teeth upon Spain, yet he was taken order with before it came to that. Bacon.

96. To take off. To purchase.
To remove from within any place.
Griefs are green;
And all thy friends which thou must make thy friends
Have but their flings and teeth newly taken out. Shakespeare.

97. To take off. To purchase.
To share.
Take part in rejoicing for the victory over the Turks. Pope.

98. To take off. To purchase.
To prevail; to have effect.
Where arms take place, all other pleas are vain;
Love taught me force, and force shall love maintain. Dry.

99. To take off. To purchase.
The debt a man owes his father takes place, and gives the father a right to inherit. Locke.

100. To take off. To purchase.
To borrow upon credit or interest.
The smooth pates now wear nothing but high shoes; and if a man is through with them in honest taking up, they stand upon security. Shakespeare.

101. To take off. To purchase.
We take up corn for them, that we may eat and live. Neh.

102. To take off. To purchase.
When Winter shuts the seas, the to the merchant goes,
Rich crystals of the rock she takes up there,
Huge agate vases, and old china ware. Dryden's Juvenal.

103. To take off. To purchase.
I have anticipated already, and taken up from Boccaccio before I come to him. Dryden's Fables.

104. To take off. To purchase.
Men, for want of due payment, are forced to take up the necessities of life at almost double value. Swift.

105. To take off. To purchase.
To be ready for; to engage with.
His divisions
Are, one power against the French,
And one against Glendower; perforce, a third
Must take up us. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

106. To take off. To purchase.
To apply to the use of.
We take up arms not to revenge ourselves,
But free the commonwealth. Addison.

107. To take off. To purchase.
To begin.
They shall take up a lamentation for me. Ezek. xxv. 17.

108. To take off. To purchase.
Princes friendship, which they take up upon the accounts of judgment and merit, they most times lay down out of humour. South's Sermon.

109. To take off. To purchase.
To fasten with a ligature passed under.
A large vessel opened by incision must be taken up before you proceed. Sharp.

110. To take off. To purchase.
To engross; to engage.
Take my esteem,
If from my heart you ask, or hope for more,
I grieve the place is taken up before. Dryden.

111. To take off. To purchase.
I intended to have left the stage, to which my genius never much inclined me, for a work which would have taken up my life in the performance. Dryden's Juvenal.

112. To take off. To purchase.
Over-much anxiety in worldly things takes up the mind, hardly admitting so much as a thought of heaven. Duppa.

113. To take off. To purchase.
To understand fully his particular calling in the commonwealth, and religion, which is his calling, as he is a man, takes up his whole time. Locke.

114. To take off. To purchase.
Every one knows that mines alone furnish these: but withal, countries stored with mines are poor; the digging and refining of these metals taking up the labour, and wasting the number of the people. Locke.

115. To take off. To purchase.
We were so confident of success, that most of my fellow-soldiers were taken up with the same imaginations. Addison.

116. To take off. To purchase.
The following letter is from an artist, now taken up with this invention. Addison.

117. To take off. To purchase.
There is so much time taken up in the ceremony, that before they enter on their subject the dialogue is half ended. Addison on ancient Medals.

118. To take off. To purchase.
The affairs of religion and war took up Constantine so much, that he had not time to think of trade. Arbutnot.

119. To take off. To purchase.
When